Lesson Plan: UN Reform

Prepared by Kelly Walker, Instructor of International Relations/ History at Kellam High School in Virginia Beach, VA

Overview:
In this lesson, students will identify why many United Nations governmental institutions require reform.

Objectives:
By the end of the lesson, students will be able to:
1. Identify the governing institutions of the UN
2. Recognize the flaws and the recent scandals concerning the governing institutions of the UN
3. Develop several solutions for reform in many of the UN governing institutions

Resources / Materials
1. Background reading
2. Articles on scandals and reform
3. Handouts
4. Computers with Internet access
5. Paper, pens

Strategies:
Homework: Before the lesson begins, assign the UN IN BRIEF as a reading assignment and have students complete the accompanying handout #1.

You will find the UN in Brief at: http://www.un.org/Overview/brief1.html

Begin the activity by leading a class discussion using the following questions:
• What are the primary goals of the UN?
• Name several programs that the UN sponsors and their primary functions.
• How does the UN execute those goals and programs?
• What factors exist that could prohibit or stop the UN from executing those goals and programs?
• Should the UN change several of its current policies to become more efficient?
• Did the US have any role in forcing change to occur at the UN?
• How can the UN change to better execute their goals?
After discussing these questions, have students read the article on The Oil for Food Program, handout #2, and have students review the following questions:

- How did Saddam Hussein’s government take advantage of the oil for food program?
- How has the US responded to the scandal?
- How much money did Saddam Hussein siphon from the program?
- Which countries blocked the efforts of the US to stop abuse of the program?
- Why would those countries block US efforts to stop the abuse?
- Which UN officials abused the oil for food program?
- What is nepotism?
- What happened to companies that were linked to Israel?
- Who has led the investigation for the UN?

After discussing these questions and reviewing the worksheet, have students draw a political cartoon which describes the food for oil scandal.

Then, have students access the UN website:
http://www.un.org/reform/

Next, pass out Handout #3, below, and ask students to fill in the blocks while reviewing the UN Reform website. Students should focus on five main categories of reform:

1. Ensuring ethical conduct
2. Strengthening oversight and accountability
3. Updating the Organization
4. Improving senior management performance
5. Increasing transparency

Once students have filled in Handout #3, discuss the following questions:

- Which governmental organizations need reform?
- What reforms have been instituted?
- Which reforms should be instituted?
- Will these reforms better the overall image of the UN and the execution of its goals and programs?

Finally, have students write a UN resolution which outlines:

1. The flaws or problems with UN governing institutions
2. Solutions for UN governing institutions

Refer to: http://www.unausa.org
Go to: Model UN
Go to: Model UN Preparation Guide
Go to: resolutions
This is an excellent website that will take students through the process of writing an effective resolution. You may also show students UN Resolution #1483, Handout #4.
Evaluation and Assessment:

Students will be evaluated on participation in class and group discussion, completion of the handouts, and their resolution.

Extension Activity:

Allow students to role-play the adoption of resolution # 1483. Students will research the members of the Security Council and the events that culminated in the resolution.

Congressional investigators have uncovered new information showing how Saddam Hussein's government systematically purchased military-related goods for the seven years of the U.N. oil-for-food program.

According to officials involved in ongoing probes, motorcycles bought by Saddam under the United Nations' food program were used by the Fedayeen to attack U.S. forces in Iraq.

"Trucks, pickups, motorcycles and other equipment purchased by Iraqi ministries were pooled and then sent to the Defense Ministry," one official said. "They ordered motorcycles that were used by Fedayeen against us."

The black-hooded guerrillas under Saddam waged commando-type attacks on advancing U.S. troops in spring 2003.

Investigators from the staff of the House International Relations Committee disclosed details of their probe, one of several being carried out by Congress, including new details on Saddam's bribes to U.N. officials and officials of foreign governments.

A second investigation, led by Rep. Christopher Shays, Connecticut Republican and chairman of the Government Reform subcommittee on national security, emerging threats and international relations, has found that Saddam ran the Iraqi side of the food program as a "cash cow" that let him buy weapons with some of the $10 billion he siphoned off, according to a report by the investigators.

Mr. Shays' panel is scheduled to hold a hearing on the report today.

The governments of Russia, France and China also blocked U.S. efforts within the United Nations to stop abuse of the program, which was designed to get food and medicine to Iraqis through limited sales of oil.

"As the program developed, it became increasingly apparent the French, Russians, and Chinese had much to gain from maintaining the status quo," a staff subcommittee memorandum states.

The Shays investigation also concluded that the U.N. officials, including executive director Benon Sevan, also abused the oil-for-food program.

Mr. Sevan was identified in Iraqi Oil Ministry documents as having participated in a scheme by Saddam to issue vouchers to people that let them profit from illicit sales of Iraqi oil. Mr. Sevan has denied accusations that he profited from the program.

The report makes another charge of corruption, about nepotism involving Kojo Annan, the son of U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan and a former employee of the Swiss-based company Cotecna.

The report stated that Cotecna, which the United Nations hired to monitor goods entering Iraq under the oil-for-food program, "was guilty of a wide variety of abuses," including overcharging the United Nations and failing to inspect goods entering Iraq.

A U.N. audit revealed that up to $111 million was missing as a result of Cotecna's work in northern Iraq, the report said.

Investigators for Rep. Henry J. Hyde, Illinois Republican and chairman of the International Relations Committee, said their panel's probe has uncovered lists of companies favored by Saddam that profited from the illicit oil and humanitarian goods trade.

The panel also uncovered blacklists of firms that were denied lucrative contracts because of suspected links to Israel or because they refused to go along with corruption.

The Hyde investigators said there are signs that Saddam's government used money obtained under the U.N. program to buy arms from Russia and Belarus or on the international black market through middlemen in Jordan and Syria.

The Iraqis obtained cash for Saddam or his agents by adding surcharges of between 5 percent and 15 percent to sales of Iraqi oil permitted by the U.N. program.

"This program was flawed from the start," one official said. "It granted Saddam so much autonomy in picking winners and losers — who got oil contracts, who got humanitarian contracts."

The investigators think that Saddam made about $4 billion through smuggling oil and about $6 billion in corruption related to contracts. The $10 billion estimate is considered a conservative one, the officials said.

The United Nations is conducting its own oil-for-food corruption probe, led by former Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker.
